Empiricism, like Descartes' version of rationalism, cuts us off from the physical world, from reality - because we can only know it indirectly, via sense impressions. This means that we can't be certain about anything except our own private sensations, which makes our beliefs subjective, whereas we normally like to think that our knowledge claims (ie good quality beliefs) are objectively true.

Hume on the relation between impressions and ideas

Hume on the relation between impressions and ideas

IMPRESSIONS AND IDEAS Hume's theory of the mind owes a great debt to John Locke's ideas. Hume names the basic contents of the mind, and what we are immediately and directly aware of, are perceptions , what Locke described as whatsoever the mind perceives in itself, or is the immediate object of perception, thought or understanding

Philosophical Empiricism: Knowledge Through the Senses

Empiricism is the philosophical stance according to which the senses are the ultimate source of human knowledge. It stands in contrast to rationalism, according to which reason is the ultimate source of knowledge.

Empiricism - By Branch / Doctrine - The Basics of Philosophy

Empiricism is the theory that the origin of all knowledge is sense experience. It emphasizes the role of experience and evidence, especially sensory perception, in the formation of ideas, and argues that the only knowledge humans can have is a posteriori (i.e. based on experience).

David Hume (Stanford Encyclopedia of Philosophy)

Hume distinguishes two kinds of impressions: impressions of sensation, or original impressions, and impressions of reflection, or secondary impressions. Impressions of sensation include the feelings we get from our five senses as well as pains and pleasures, all of which arise in us originally, from unknown causes (T 1.1.2.1/7). He calls them
